

The deployment diagram for the Track Orders use case involves a client machine (e.g., browser or mobile app), web server, application server, and database server. The client machine interacts with the web server via HTTPS, which forwards requests to the application server for order tracking. The application server handles business logic, querying the database server for order data. Components like the front-end app, backend API, and order data are deployed on the respective servers for communication.